The Future of Environmental Finance Public Forum

SAVE THE DATE:

May 5, 2014

1:30 - 4:30 p.m.

School of Government, UNC-Chapel Hill

On May 5, the UNC Environmental Finance Center will host "The Future of Environmental Finance," a free, public forum to share promising strategies for financing current and future environmental challenges.

Who Pays? With What Money?

The costs of environmental services, programs, and infrastructure continue to rise. At the same time, the individuals, communities, and governments tasked with paying for environmental protection are experiencing significant financial challenges. Whether a billion dollar effort to restore a region's polluted water supply, a $4,000 project to weatherize a financially disadvantaged family's home, or a program to replace a small town's 50-year-old water treatment plant, all environmental initiatives share a common challenge: who will pay and and with what money?

LIVE STREAMING

If you are unable to attend the public forum in Chapel Hill, you will be able to live-stream the event on your computer. Details will be available soon on the event web page.

environmental finance questions, the most brilliantly conceived environmental technology or program will likely fall short of achieving its goals.

Promising Strategies

This public forum will feature engaging presentations from prominent environmental finance experts and innovators from a variety of perspectives that cut across sectors and issues.

This event will foster discussion and identify emerging trends, strategies, and ideas that will help answer the basic "how will we pay" questions at the heart of successful environmental protection.
