About the Public Health Reserve Corps

The Orange County Health Department started the Public Health Reserve Corps (PHRC) in 2003 to improve its ability to respond to public health emergencies and provide ongoing public health programs. The PHRC recruits and trains community members as volunteers who can help the health department and partner agencies address urgent public health needs.

If you live or work in Orange County and are age 18 or older, then you are eligible to join the PHRC. Read this brochure to learn more about your volunteer role and how to register.

For more information, call 919-245-2388 or visit www.co.orange.nc.us/health

Community Members Needed

Public Health Preparedness

Volunteers in the PHRC could be asked to respond to natural and man-made disasters and communicable disease outbreaks. The PHRC prepares volunteers to be able to work in mass medication dispensing clinics, mass vaccination clinics, emergency shelters, and communicable disease call centers in response to local and non-local public health emergencies.

Ongoing Public Health Programs

The Orange County Health Department offers a wide array of health programs. Volunteers in the PHRC are often asked to help staff education and screening events like health fairs, community health assessments, and flu clinics.
